

Heber Creeper Bridge over Provo River
about one mile north of Wildwood

Helicopter View of Heber Creeper Bridge (wooden trestle at Bear Canyon
before Henoyer Bridge was installed)

Need
Pics
of
New Bridge
to Bear
Canyon
Sig: q8h with

Historic Utah bridge gets a new river to cross

By Brooke Adams
Deseret News staff writer

WASATCH COUNTY — The oldest pinned Pratt truss bridge in the state has a new home in Provo Canyon.

Tuesday afternoon the bridge was set in place crossing the Provo River at Bear Canyon by its new owner, Steve Ault of American Fork. Ault owns Bear Canyon, and wants to use the bridge to get to his property. He is also hoping that some day, the bridge will be tied into the Provo River Trail.

But Ault will have to take care of a little business with Wasatch County first: he didn't realize he needed a building permit for locating the bridge in the canyon, and a stop work order was placed on the bridge Wednesday.

The 68-foot-long bridge, built in 1907, formerly spanned the Weber River in Henefer. Because the bridge has retained its historic integrity, it is eligible for the National Register.

PHOTOGRAPHY / RICK GLEASON

Formerly located on the Weber River at Henefer, 81-year-old truss bridge has been relocated to its new home over the Provo River in Bear Canyon.

Earlier this year, the Utah Department of Transportation replaced the truss bridge. Rather than junk it, UDOT offered the bridge free of charge to anyone willing to relocate it.

Ault made a successful proposal for the bridge, and after "seven months of hell spent working out the details," finally got the bridge delivered to Provo Canyon last week.

"It is one of the most exciting things that has ever happened, in my opinion," Ault said.

"Rather than cut up and scrap the bridge, UDOT is letting it be put to public use. I think this is unequalled in private and public participation."

Ault said the bridge will be open to foot and bicycle traffic, but not to vehicles.

Ault hired a crane at $200 an hour to lift the bridge from the highway down to the river.

He joked that he wanted the bridge for fame and glory, before revealing the real reason a man would want a canyon and a historic bridge: "I've got eight kids to raise." He had the land on which to let his kids roam. Now Ault has a way to get them there.

SPEAK OUT on issues affecting you!*
Express yourself in the Reader's Forum of your DESERET NEWS

Steven Ault moved an old Steel Trestle bridge from Henefer, Utah to about 200 feet up river from Heber Creeper wooden <sup>Trestle</sup> bridge near mouth of Bear Canyon

This move was made in 1988 by Mr Ault who bought
Bear Canyon Properties
from ?

